One to three more guys to help me My little brother and I are working on a problem in discrete math that we could use some help solving: Problem : Suppose that an immigrant arrived to the United States in the year 2000 and that he now lives in Chicago for the past six years. Suppose furthermore that, at some point during the past year, this immigrant left his home and came to the village of Greenville about two hours from Chicago. Suppose that the immigrant only walks at a fairly fast pace. Find the average time it took him to travel to the village. My brother can't figure this out by himself. I think we can solve this if we can find a metric (the distance is like a metric in which the time is the distance divided by two). I'm not sure how to find this. I haven't seen one before. A: Each state (including Chicago) has a small region around it. The region of Chicago is within Greenville. We can assign each state a number from 0 to 2 in the following way: State s_0 is assigned 0. State s_1 is assigned 0. State s_2 is assigned 1. State s_0 is closest to Greenville. State s_2 is farthest from Greenville. Now we look at how long it takes an immigrant to travel from state s_0 to state s_2. If we multiply that distance (round up to nearest hundredth of a mile) by the number of miles an immigrant walks (this amount b7e8fdf5c8 tinySpell is a lightweight software application whose purpose is to help you check the spelling of words in any programs that offer support for text input. It comes in handy especially when working with utilities that don't embed the spell checking option. Unobtrusive running mode The tool runs quietly in the system tray and displays the audio and popup notifications when it detects that a word is typed incorrectly. Several features can be activated directly from the system tray, while detailed configuration settings can be triggered from a separate window. There's also support for a help manual but there's a slight chance that you may use it taken into consideration the overall simplicity of the tool. Main features tinySpell offers you the possibility to enable or disable its functions, as well as deactivate the sound notifications. Plus, you may create a custom list with utilities where tinySpell is disabled. Working with this small program proves to be nothing but a child's play, as you only need to open the document or application and start typing in the text. It automatically plays sound notifications and highlights the wrong entry with red just above the original word. What's more, you can use a replacement list with words that you frequently use, add words into a dictionary, as well as access web information. Configuration settings tinySpell entitles you to tweak the process in detail, as you can run the tool at Windows startup, show spelling tips, beep when errors are detected, check clipboard text, copy or insert the replacement word, enable or disable the exclusion list with custom utilities, as well as play a custom audio file (WAV file format) and test it. What's more, you can opt for a small, medium, large, or huge spelling tip, enable the bold option, pick its displaying time and text color, as well as assign hotkeys for opening the replacement list, accessing the web data, as well as disabling or enabling the process. Bottom line To sum things up, tinySpell comes packed with a handy set of options for helping you check your documents for errors. If you want to skip the installation steps, you can download the portable version of the program, which can be found here.
